Excerpt: . . . apart, and 8 to 10 seeds in a hill. If the seed sprouts well, and the danger of bugs is past, thin out to three vines in a hill. That is, one will notice bugs on the plants but when they get to be six inches high the bugs do not affect them, then thinning out process is started. Hoe the plants, to keep all other growth out. The Squash develops about August 1st and continues to until late fall. It is a continuous maturing crop. If the weather is real dry, the roots may be watered, but not the vines. The striped beetle which attacks the plants as soon as they come through can be controlled by sprinkling slacked lime, ashes, road dust or arsenate of lead on the foliage when there is dew on it. A more dangerous enemy is the vine...
